Anemia in patients with chronic renal failure (CRF) is a highly prevalent and debilitating condition. Because of the considerable heterogeneity of the anemia of CRF, therapy should be individualized. Traditional approaches to the anemia of CRF include replacement of depleted erythropoietin (EPO) levels, administration of EPO alone or in combination with other agents such as iron or the erythropoiesis-stimulating agent (ESA), and provision of larger quantities of iron. EPO therapy is relatively safe and effective; however, its efficacy declines with time and it is associated with unwanted side effects. Use of iron or an ESA in combination with EPO is recommended, although the combination of ESA and EPO is more effective than ESA alone, and iron is less effective than ESA or EPO alone. The use of ESA in combination with EPO is limited by the potentially severe adverse effects of ESA. All ESAs are associated with some risk of thromboembolic disease. Therefore, patients should be informed of the risks before ESA therapy is initiated, and guidelines for screening, prevention, and treatment should be established. Management strategies for patients with anemia of CRF should include the implementation of appropriate supportive measures to maintain the hemoglobin levels.Hi! I just started out with team frites and in the game it says that I'm a level 19 team leader. Is there some kind of level cap for teams? How does that work? Ugle Aug 8, 2017, 09:54 PM Hi!
